

A Native Perspective of Virgin Islands Culture, People, Places, History and More

Widely reaching Grassroots & Professional Audiences in the U.S., Virgin Islands, Caribbean and Internationally

DaraMonifah[®] Cooper (DMC) is a multi-media artist and new media journalist born and raised on St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands. After completing high school in the 11th grade as an early admissions student at the University of the Virgin Islands, her higher education includes a B.A. in Communication focused on photojournalism, while specializing in Publication Layout/Design with concentrations in Music and Art. She completed a master's degree in New Media Journalism online while working full time. Continuing as part-time Communications Faculty, full-time as Radio Station Manager and Cooperative Extension Service Communications Specialist, she is working on a Ph.D. in Strategic Media.

An innate journalist from elementary school, DaraMonifah[™] uses her decades of media, networking and community building experiences to fuse connections between grassroots initiatives, individuals and various professionals in the Caribbean or internationally in areas of multi-disciplinary arts, culture, history, youth, environment, technology and education.

The DaraMonifah.com website content includes a native perspective of Virgin Islands culture, people, places, history and more. She prides herself on providing ground level insight into subjects including the healing and entertainment arts, tranquil environments, unique people, vegan/vegetarian food, farmers markets, technology trends and events from a professional and grassroots perspective. The various topics lend themselves well to giving her a unique advantage for providing a combination of value-added services.
